RECOMMENDATION LETTER

Applicant	APP-006
Recommender role	School Counselor
Relationship note	Advised the applicant and reviewed academic and extracurricular progress.
Submission status	Confidential synthetic recommendation

To the Admissions Committee: I am writing in support of Applicant APP-006 from the perspective of School Counselor. Over the course of the application period, I have reviewed the student's progress, discussed academic goals, and observed how the applicant responds to both routine expectations and unfamiliar challenges. Advised the applicant and reviewed academic and extracurricular progress.

Applicant APP-006 has developed a clear interest in Neuroscience, Human Development, Social Work. What stands out is not simply the intended field, but the student's effort to connect that interest to real responsibilities. In planning courses and activities, the applicant consistently asks how a choice will build a useful skill, create a stronger foundation, or allow the student to contribute to a group.

The student's involvement in Varsity Girl's Tennis illustrates this approach. The applicant has learned that leadership often involves preparation that other people do not see: confirming details, organizing materials, checking that everyone understands the next step, and following up after an event. The student is willing to complete that work and has become more confident in helping peers do the same.

The applicant also demonstrates reflective judgment. When a result is weaker than expected, the student can identify what was within personal control, seek specific guidance, and make a concrete adjustment. This pattern is visible across academic planning, group assignments, and extracurricular commitments. It suggests the resilience needed for a college environment where expectations and schedules can change quickly.

In conversations with adults and peers, the applicant is respectful without being passive. The student listens carefully, explains reasoning directly, and is comfortable acknowledging uncertainty. These qualities support productive collaboration and will help the applicant engage with classmates whose experiences and viewpoints differ from the student's own.

The applicant's reliability is also evident in routine responsibilities. Deadlines are recorded, materials are prepared in advance, and unfinished tasks are communicated rather than ignored. When several obligations compete for attention, the student identifies the most immediate requirement and creates a realistic sequence for completing the remaining work. This developing ability to prioritize will be valuable in college, where academic assignments, campus involvement, and personal responsibilities frequently overlap. Just as important, the applicant understands that asking for clarification is a responsible step when expectations are uncertain.
